Excerpt from The Elements of the Differential Diagnosis of Pott s Disease in Childhood: Read Before the Orthopedic Section, New York Academy of Medicine, April 21st, 1893 The spine serves not only as the elastic support of the body, but it encloses the Spinal cord, from which branch the nerves of motion and sensation. Although as a whole, it is constantly changing its shape, with every change in attitude, yet under the influence of the force of gravity and the action of the muscles in the preservation of the erect posture, a certain fixed contour is attained known as normal - forward in the upper, backward in the middle and forward again in the lower region of the spine. Each of these regions has certain movements and functions peculiar to itself; the function of the cervical spine is to support the head, and allow free motion; the middle portion is made rigid in the formation of the thoracic cavity, the lower region is again free and movable.
