This table has served as a basis for the prediction of the probable burning temperatures of the commercial bodies, a fact which was accomplished with success. It appears that the time of burning factor is by no means as important, as that of the burning temperature in determining the constitution and microstructure of the ware. Mention must be made here that no cristobalite or tridymite has been definitely observed in any of the laboratory or commercial bodies examined. It appears that the quartz dissolves in the feldspar glass more readily than it inverts to the other modifications. In conclusion we may state that the petrographic microscopic study of porcelain led to interesting and, it is to be hoped, important technical results. It has placed the chemical and physical processes involved in the formation of porcelain on a more quantitative thermal basis. Furthermore it has offered a means of predicting the burning temperature of ware from the examination of a fragment much too small in size to be satisfactory for even a chemical analysis. Acknowledgments are due to Prof. A. V. Bleining for his kindly suggestions throughout the work, to H. A. Brady for the preparation of the thin sections, and to W. L. Howat, C. S. Kinnison, and P. Teeter for the preparation of the bodies examined. A STUDY OF BRISTOL GLAZES COMPOUNDED ON THE NORM BASIS BY ARTHUR S. WATTS The work of Prof. Staley in Vol. XIII,...
