Createspace Independent Publishing Platform, United States, 2013. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .The book An African Sunset is my first one, and is based on my own experience while I served my country in Togo, West Africa; and to what I have been exposed in that part of the world. It is fiction of course, but it does describe the slow and steady morale decadence of a small group of people, who were sent to assist the population of a certain country. In spite of the ideals and good wishes of those who sent them and that group's own expectations, the sudden change in their status of life compared with the locals' poverty, turns them into arrogant and covetous lot without their being aware of it. The protagonist Reuven Shatz, a young agricultural expert, joins a small Israeli diplomatic delegation in a West African country. He is sent there to replace an agricultural instructor whose term there reached its end. Hardly a week passes and he is already acquainted with the trivial disputes among the delegation's members. Major Everon the agricultural delegation's head takes him under his guidance, keeps him away from the foreign office delegates, and does his best to adjust Shatz not just to the harsh local climate, but to the way of life that he himself leads there. As Shatz is supposed to replace Priel his predecessor as smoothly as possible, he is requested to work in correlation with him at the farm near the town of Dialo; thus he spends the few days up to the Priel's departure at their cottage as their guest. The delicate matter to accept him as their guest, is mediated quite rudely by Everon. During his stay with the Priel's...
