(Elliott quoting from Burgess, 2004, p.235) This quote probably describes what Peter Jackson also had in mind when he read The Lord of the Rings for the first time and what influenced him to make a Hollywood movie out of this most famous work of fantasy fiction. Reading a book and feeling a need to see the characters, to hear their voices and follow them through their adventure, is probably also the experience many readers of The lord of the Rings trilogy had. And they expressed this feeling by watching the movies in the cinemas more than just a single time. The amount of money the movies brought in was incredible. The box office reported a worldwide total of approximately 3 billion dollars, which merely includes the amount, brought in by the movie-goers, and not even the sale of the DVDs and other merchandising articles. How many of them had actually read the novels before is not clear, but it seems obvious that many of them were craving for a filmic adaptation of their favourite book. However, this is not the only truth concerning the movies. Right after the start of the first film, the fan community of the book started criticizing the adaptation in a substantial amount of..
