

On Gerhard Richters Blur Effect. the Ambivalent Character of a Distanced Force

By Sarah Doerfel

GRIN Verlag GmbH. Paperback. Condition: New. 74 pages. Dimensions: 8.3in. x 5.8in. x 0.2in. Bachelor Thesis from the year 2013 in the subject Art - Photography and Film, grade: 78 1, University of Westminster (Department of Media, Arts and Design), course: Photography Dissertation, language: English, abstract: The strongest of Richters effects of withdrawing the work from the viewers gaze, is the creation of a softening blur as the final touch to all his Photo Paintings. Making the paintings, the artist firstly drafts his subject with a normally sized brush to create a sharp image (Fig. 3). Having finished, he would come with a broader brush or a squeegee and blur the still wet oil paint (Fig. 4) to create the photographic effect of an out-of-focus image. The blur in these paintings is not a trace of movement of the object in the photograph. This blur is an addition to the painting that does not relate to a form of haziness in the specific photographic source image, but to the general idea of vagueness, indecisiveness, anti-definition. Therefore, it mirrors the artists attitudes towards life in an especially expressive way. The enlargement of the usual distance between what is depicted and the viewer...
