Excerpt from Controlling Coastal Sand Dunes in the Pacific Northwest Six years ago the advancing sand dunes on the Clatsop Plains of Oregon, at the mouth of the Columbia River, were menacing forts, military reservations, roads, and private property valued at Worse, they were also threatening to impede the flow of nearly of ocean - going commerce moving in and out of the entrance to the Columbia River, which lay directly in the path of the oncoming dunes. Today the sand movement on the Clatsop Plains has been arrested, and what was once a dangerous expanse of wind blown sand 20 miles long and at places miles wide has been transformed into a mantle of planted grass. In wartime this work is especially vital, much more important than the money values that were protected by this 6 - year job of the Soil Conservation Service. Similar conditions are found at the mouths of other navigable rivers on the Pacific coast and on other coastal areas. The methods and techniques of dune control de scribed in this publication, as applied to the Pacific North west coast, can be adopted as well to other threatened points.
