Excerpt: . . . 14 It is not sufficient to finesse these points by simply assigning a lower rate of return to all university and federal research. The more fundamental problem is that many forms of research, however worthy they may be, do not deserve to be designated as investment because they do not contribute to the future growth of output. Of course, many advances arising from university or government research eventually have an important indirect effect on growth. Consider, however, the usual conventions and methods of growth accounting. Growth accounting typically examines only the proximate sources of growth. For example, growth due to a higher number of educated workers is typically attributed to labor quality, and growth due to larger amounts of capital is similarly attributed to capital formation. Even if improvements in technology are the fundamental underlying cause, which creates the demand for a more educated work force or creates the new equipment which makes...
