Excerpt: . . . the formative principles of knowledge; too much of God as a moderately benevolent taskmaster, too little of Him as a fount of righteousness and truth. There was but little of the philosophic spirit which views the world as from a mountain-top; no professed philosopher taught in the spirit of Plato as the spectator of all time and existence. It is now possible in the remainder of the chapter to enumerate the more important of Greens writings in their chronological order. In 1862 he won the Chancellors prize for an essay entitled, The Value and Influence of the Works of Fiction in Modern Times. This essay indicates both the authors breadth of interest and his real literary scholarship and appreciation. In 1866 he gave to the North British Review an article for publication on the Philosophy of Aristotle. During 1874 and 1875 Green published his...
