AuthorHouse. Paperback. Book Condition: New. Paperback. 420 pages. Dimensions: 8.0in. x 4.9in. x 1.0in. The basis for this story came to the author from a dream in November of 1998. It was such a real and memorable dream, encompassing parts of the third quarter of the story, the author spent six months thinking about who these people might be in a real-life scenario. Where did they come from, what led them to do what they are doing, and why would they do what they did. The six months of thought gave good answers to all such questions. So this first-time author sat down in April of 1999 and started writing from page one. The thoughts, people, places and things spilled forth as the rough manuscript was written straight through to the end. The dream that sparked this dedicated frenzy into the unknown was about a small band of outlaws in the last months of World War II, who had kidnapped a touring baseball team to hide among the players on a private bus. The tour was from Colorado to the northern Montana area where the little gang's goal was to cross the border into the safety of Canada. Early in the developing story, the lead character, Henry Lapointe, tells his little gang that they must pull a robbery off without shooting a soul. If you kill a cop, there aint a sundown that can hide you! They end up on the run, looking for just such a sundown! This original, fictional story is told against the real backdrop of the home front during the Second World War. Every day is time stamped with 1945s calendar and little windows are opened for the reader to view past the characters into the reality, the ironies, and horrors of that war. It is the Authors...
