Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Encyclopaedia Medica, Vol. 4: Foot to Hernia The number of cases recorded in the human subject probably falls far short of representing the actual figures, on account of the difficulty in many instances of making a correct diagnosis. The first case was recorded in 1695. Since then many epidemics have occurred in different countries, and more especially between 1862 and 1869 in this country, though even in 1884 over two hundred persons suffered from the disease in Dover. In Germany, a large number of cases are still recorded each year. Etiology. - The virus is contained in the saliva, the milk, urine, feces, and skin secretions, and retains its vitality for months, even for a year. Since the secretions and dejections are infective, it has been observed that the disease spreads along the great trade routes from the east of Europe to the west, and along the railway trunk lines, healthy animals being contaminated by the cattle-trucks, stubbles, pastures, and byres that have sheltered the diseased, and by manure, litter, fodder that have been soiled by the infective secretions. The disease is also spread by the attendants upon the animals, milkers, cattle and sheep dealers, and others brought in contact with healthy stock, after having handled those suffering from foot and mouth disease. It is known that birds suffer from the disease, and these may assist in spreading the disease. The bacteria which have been found in connection with the disease possess merely an historic interest, and none of them represent the specific causal agent, which has not yet been discovered. Numerous bacteria have been found mainly in the vesicles: Micrococcus aptharum (Rivolta and Nosotti), streptococci (Klein), Streptococcus involutus...
