The brigade combat team (BCT) (or brigade task force BTF) and the provincial reconstruction team (PRT) have responsibilities for governance, security, development, and information lines of effort (LOEs) within a defined geographical area of responsibility; however, component elements of the task force do not always plan or execute together. There is a distinct challenge for the task force commander, his staff, and the subordinate PRTs and maneuver battalion task forces to achieve true unity of effort amongst themselves. Contributing factors include: Rotation schedules of BCTs and PRTs are not synchronized; BCTs and PRTs rarely train together during predeployment; PRT composition is multicomponent, multiservice, and interagency with different cultures and operating practices; Personalities/personality conflicts can be a major factor; Multiple reporting channels detract from synchronization. To help BCT and PRT leaders and staffs (civilian and military) establish unity of effort among their organizations at the very outset of operations in theater. This is not a how-to manual. Rather, this guide is designed to provide BCT and PRT leaders and staffs a set of tools, approaches, and observations gathered from recently...
