Not illustrated. 1883 Excerpt: . . . for government purposes, the last and least subdivision is the school district. To this almost infinitesimal fraction of population is assigned the ultimate responsibility for the schools. In no country is the work of supervision intrusted to men so little educated, so little endowed with executive capacity, as in ours. No country pays so meanly its officers of instruction and inspection. No country rewards genuine executive ability better when this ability is directed to the management of a railroad or a manufacturing enterprise. Legislators will probably never be found unwilling to amuse the petitioners for temperance laws, anti-bribery laws and compulsory education laws, by readily enacting whatever correct doctrine these may be pleased to formulate. But laws doubling or trebling the salaries of county commissioners and enforcing as a condition of eligibility to a county commissionership the passing of a rigid examination in science, ancient and...
