On the 15th of March 1881 the Thetis left Coquimbo, and after a long passage of thirty-four days reached Pitcairn Island, some 4000 miles due west of Coquimbo. The voyage (he wrote) was very monotonous. Day after day nothing was to be seen ahead and astern, at our right hand and on our left, but the broad expanse of the mighty deep. At length the welcome cry from the mast-head of e Land oh I put new life into us. The ship was making such slow progress that it was 5 P. m. before we reached Bounty Bay. When we were about three miles off shore we saw two boats full of natives pulling towards us. They were soon alongside, and proved to be the two whale-boats sent to the islanders by the Pitcairn Committee in London. 1 The early history of this isolated and very...
