Excerpt from Transactions of the Manchester Statistical Society These milder Socialists and true Social Reformers distrust violent revolutions, which they think take one step forward and two back ward. They think that no sudden revolution is ever possible in fundamental social institutions without a previous change and preparation in men s minds that Private Property and Inheritance, the oldest and most universal institutions, are the mere legal expression Of our inmost human nature 5 that Freedom of Contract and Interest, the other two things chie?y attacked by the Socialists, are necessary consequences of man s social circumstances and his nature conjointly, and that in consequence the first two cannot be abolished unless man s nature is wholly changed, nor the second unless you alter his social environment as well as his nature that the true course, therefore, for the State, is to let Private Property and Inheritance remain, but to modify the conceptions and to limit the rights connected with them, and to interfere with Free dom of Contract only so far as it is an engine for working injustice, as it...
